The History and Purpose of This Concordance

IN 1537 Thomas Mathews' Bible came out in print and one John Marbeck, of London, greatly desired to own one. Being far too poor to purchase such a book, however, he decided to borrow one from a friend and copy it off by hand on "fair great paper." Master John had proceeded through the first five books of the Old Testament and was just turning his attention to Joshua, when one day a friend named Turner interrupted his work.

> "Tush!" quoth he, "thou goest about a vain, tedious labour. But this were a profitable work, for thee, to set out a concordance in English."
> "A concordance," said I, "what is that?"
> Then he told me it was a book to find out any word in the whole Bible by the letter, and that there was such a one in Latin already.
> Then I told him I had no learning to go about such a thing.
> "Enough," quoth he, "for that matter, for it requireth not so much learning as diligence. And seeing thou art so painful a man, and one that can not be unoccupied, it were a good exercise for thee."

Master John accordingly fell to work on this "good exercise." He had no easy time of it—his papers were seized, printers discouraged him, and he was even examined by the bishops, an account of which is given in Fox's Book of Martyrs. (A portion of the story he told his judges is quoted above.) But in 1550 appeared his folio volume, faulty and defective, it is true, but the first concordance to the whole English Bible.

Master Turner was quite right in telling his friend John Marbeck that there was "such a one in Latin already." There were numbers of them. Necessity for such a book seems to have been early felt. Indeed, for any writing of great import, from which are adduced passages which affect our daily life and actions, such a handbook is practically indispensable for systematic study. Today we find concordances to Dante, Shakespeare, Chaucer and most of the nineteenth century poets as well as to the Bible. The original impetus to work on Bible concordances —and hence to all—was due to a conviction that the various parts of the Bible were consistent with one another as parts of a divine revelation and might be combined as harmonious elements in one great system of spiritual truth.

LATIN. The very first work of this kind is accredited to Antonius of Padua (1195-1231), and was called Concordantiae Morales. But Hugh de S. Caro—Cardinal Hugo—probably deserves first place with his concordance to the whole Bible, the Latin Vulgate, in 1244. His method of locating references is interesting. Since the chapters of the Bible had not then been divided into verses, Hugo adopted the plan of assuming each chapter to have seven parts, which he designated by the first seven letters of the alphabet. For example, the word terra, occurring in the first part of Genesis 1, would be indicated as terra, Gen. 1, a. Single words only were given, thus adding to the difficulty of locating references. In 1250, however, three men of English origin, John of Derlington, Richard of Stavensby and Hugo of Croyndon, revised Hugo's work and used the plan of giving the words in immediate proximity to the keyword.

The next to offer improvements to this concordance was Conrad the Elder, of Halberstadt, in 1290. He still divided the long chapters into seven parts, but made but four parts of the short chapters, lettering them a, b, c, d. He also shortened the citations made by the previous revisers so as to reduce the size of the volume. Conrad's edition took precedence over all the others, and as late as 1826 an edition of the Vulgate printed in Frankfort shows, by its marginal lettering, the chapter divisions as designated by him.

The first printed concordance appeared in 1470. Numerous and varied reprints were made of this, the last being the Bibliorum Sacrorum Concordantiae, by F. P. Dutripon. (The Catholic clergy use this concordance, for there is no concordance to the Douay translation of the Vulgate.)

HEBREW. The preparation of concordances was not, of course, confined to the Latin language. Rabbi Mordecai (or Isaac) Nathan prepared the first Hebrew concordance. Starting his task in 1438, he labored for ten years towards its completion. It was not published, however, until 1523 or 1524, when it appeared in Venice, bearing the title The Light to the Way. A very poor Latin translation of it was brought out, as well as several other Hebrew editions.

The many errors in Rabbi Nathan's work were corrected, and his concordance improved, by a Franciscan friar, Marius de Calasio, author of a Hebrew grammar and dictionary and a teacher of Hebrew at Rome by appointment of Pope Paul V. He began his difficult task of revision at the age of seventy, but when he died in 1620, he left it almost ready for the printer. The work was carried on to completion by Michael Angelus of St. Romulus, a professor of Hebrew and theology, and was published in 1621 in Rome, entitled Concordantiae Sacrorum Bibliorum Hebraicorum. Each word's meaning is given in both Hebrew and Latin, followed by the corresponding words in other Semitic languages, with Latin interpretations, and last of all the passages are given wherein the word is to be found. Editions appeared in Cologne, Rome and London. The London edition, 1747-1749, directed by William Romaine, was distinguished by having as patrons the Pope and all the European monarchs. This work of Rabbi Nathan's was used as a basis for several other Hebrew and Chaldee concordances, each striving to improve upon the other.

SYRIAC. A Syriac concordance (almost more of a lexicon) was published in 1709, in Leyden, by Charles Schaaf, a German scholar. It appeared simultaneously with an extremely accurate edition of the Syriac New Testament, edited by Leusden and Schaaf, which is regarded as the very best edition which has ever been published.

GREEK. In the past the idea has been given credence that in the year 1300 a monk, Euthalius Rhodius, prepared a concordance to the entire Bible in Greek. If he did so, he kept his efforts well concealed; for the concordance was never printed and there is no hand-made copy of it in existence, though a manuscript copy of it is purported to have been seen in Rome in the seventeenth century. We pass by this as tradition only, and look to Conrad Kircher, a Lutheran minister of Augsburg, for the inauguration of endeavor in this field. His two-volume concordance published at Frankfort in 1607 is really a Hebrew-Greek work, since he follows the order of the Hebrew words, putting after them the corresponding Greek words.

The first Greek concordance, as such, was that of Abraham Tromm, published in two volumes in 1718. This gives the Greek words in order, with Latin and Hebrew translations of each following. The Scriptural passages in which they are contained are given, in regular order of books and chapters, with quotations from the context. The passages from the Apocrypha follow those of the canonical books under their common title word. This important and accurate concordance was completed in Tromm's eighty-fifth year, after years of the most scholarly and exacting labor. It has never been superseded and is preëminent today.

The first Greek concordance to the New Testament came from another Lutheran minister of Augsburg (1500–1554), Xystus Buteleius, librarian of the city library. Followed rapidly other similar works of varying degrees of merit, until in 1870 appeared A Critical Greek and English Concordance of the New Testament, prepared by Charles F. Hudson under the direction of Horace L. Hastings, editor of The Christian. This book represented the best critical scholarship of the age up to the time of its issue.

GERMAN. We must needs turn to the German for the very earliest concordance to any modern version of the Scriptures. Johannes Schrötter prepared his Concordanz des Newen Testamentz zu teutsch from Luther's translation in 1524—a remarkably early date. This folio was published at Strassburg. Not for nearly a century did a successor to Schrötter appear—Conrad Agricola (Bauer), in 1610. But far more valuable than this work was that of Fredrich Lanckisch, in 1677 published at Leipzig and Frankfort. This received most favorable comment and new editions followed, marked by meticulous revision and steady improvement. A more popular concordance is Gottfried Büchner's, published at Jena. It appeared in two forms, a large two-volume work (1750) and a Hand Concordanz (1740). For a time Wichmann's concordance (1782) supplanted it in general favor but in 1840 Büchner (revised by Dr. H. L. Heubner) came into the ascendant again and retains its place now as the standard German concordance.

FRENCH. Among French works of this sort, one may note as important the Concordance des Saintes Escritures of Mark Wilks, published in Paris in 1840.

ENGLISH. And now we are back to the English concordances again. The earliest one of all was the work of John Day, aided by his printer, Gybson. It is undated, though it must have appeared before 1540, and contains only the New Testament. The concordance so inadvertently undertaken by John Marbeck comes next, and in that same year (1550) an English translation of a German concordance was published. Other concordances followed, but nothing outstanding in scope or completeness appeared until Clement Cotton, in 1622, prepared one on the New Testament. In 1627 he issued a similar work on the Old Testament. Cotton's concordance was to link the Old with the New England; for Rev. Samuel Newman, who came to the new country in 1636 or 1638, used it as a basis for a like work of his own. Since his concordance came out in London in 1643, one may infer that a fair part of his study was done in New England.

In 1737 the first edition of Cruden's concordance came out in London—the Cruden's that subsequently became a household word. It has passed through numberless English and American editions, has been condensed, abridged, enlarged, revised and variously changed, but today it is still essentially what it was in the beginning, with many antiquated ideas and much extraneous matter. We find The New International Encyclopedia, after mentioning Cruden's, stating that "Three others, however, are excellent—Robert Young, Analytical Concordance to the Bible (Edinburgh, 1879) . . . Walker, Comprehensive Concordance (Boston, 1894), and James Strong, The Exhaustive Concordance (New York, 1894), which takes account of every word and is really the most ambitious work of its kind."

It is with the excellence of Walker's Comprehensive Concordance that we shall now concern ourselves. Rev. James Bradford Richmond Walker was born in Taunton, Mass., April 15, 1821. He was graduated from Brown University in 1841, and from Andover Theological Seminary in 1846. As a pastor he served the Bucksport Church, Maine, Second Church, Holyoke, Mass., and Winsted Church, Conn. He died on January 24, 1885, from an illness induced, it is believed, by his unceasing labors upon this concordance and the strain on his vitality resulting therefrom.

In arranging this concordance, the author's aim was not to obtain an all-inclusive work, containing every a, an, in, the, this, that, not, so, he, her, etc., and thus be able to present his volume as "complete." Such attention to these most insignificant details can only hinder rather than help, by including cumbersome information never needed and expanding the book into a size too unwieldy for actual and practical use. This volume as presented is a simple concordance, strictly alphabetical in arrangement, even to proper names, with passages and references under each alphabetical head in correct Biblical order. Proper names are always accented to assist in pronunciation. The page is clearly legible and the book itself is compact and pleasing in size and appearance.

No better scholar than Mr. Walker could have been found to produce such an intensely useful and practical volume. His familiarity with this branch of Biblical research and endeavor ranks second to none. He knew the best that had been done in this line by others and was thus enabled to exercise a discriminating choice in methods of procedure. Mr. Walker lived to complete his task, though he never saw his work published, but did not long survive its accomplishment. Let us allow Mr. Walker to speak for himself through the following memorandum made by him on the morning when he felt his work to be concluded:

> At this morning hour, after an all night's work, preceded by work all day, I have revised the last page of my Concordance, and have laid it aside for the printer. After two years and five months of the most continuous and uninterrupted labor, day and night, I have at last reached the consummation for which I have struggled so long and so hard; for which I have prayed to be spared, and for which I now most gratefully render thanks to Him who has preserved and sustained me so remarkably under the burden of such intense application. That I have been able to do this work demands of me the most devout and grateful recognition of a Divine Providence: and I cannot now, as I stand on the Mount Zion of my long and many years of labor, but have my heart deeply affected by my having been permitted to go through all this strenuous endeavor with such health and comfort. May the auspicious circumstances of this closing labor be prophetic of the success of this, the most comprehensive concordance of the Bible, adapted to the laity of the Church of Christ—a success which shall repair and counterbalance all the disasters which were experienced years ago in the early history of the work!
> May my heavenly Father set his seal of approval and usefulness upon this work, and may my humble plan and labor contribute to his glory in the help it shall furnish to the multitudes of the students of his Holy Word! May his name have all the glory, if any; his goodness have all the praise; his fatherly care and preservation have my grateful acknowledgement during all the years of my life! With this prayer, these acknowledgements, I lay down the pen, but with the never-to-be-forgotten record and memory of God's goodness and love cherished in my heart.
